“Rogues of the week!”

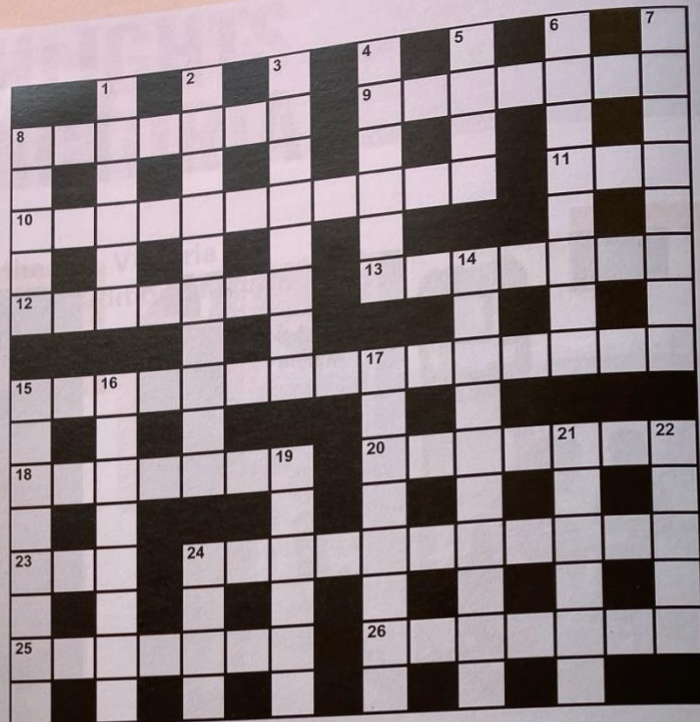

This week's rogues are well known around the shed and our photo shows Carmelo and Louis working on a special project for Louis' mother. A traditional Greek roadside chapel which is rendered and painted with blue roof.

The guys in the workshop construct projects for the community, special historical projects for Myuna Farm and personal projects like this one above. Workshop is open 6 days a week and members can discuss proposed projects or receive instruction in tool operation from Tony Brosinsky and crew.

How do you see yourself? #humor

Do y'all remember, before the internet, that people thought the cause of stupidity was the lack of access to information? Yeah. It wasn't that.

A brief piece of Spanish Military History...

The Island of Ibiza, because of its strategic position in the Mediterranean was throughout history an important military and commercial enclave.

So, in 1554, Prince Felipe, the future Felipe II, commissioned the construction of a new fortress. The original project by Calvi was taken up many years later by the Italian engineer Fratin and remained until the 18th century without any significant alterations.

Military constructions by Spanish engineers have always been a supreme example of their skills. Here is a photo of a fortress that was built in Ibiza (before the night clubs).

It is based on the Castle of St Philip of Cartagena of the Indies, where Blas de Lezo culminated his glorious campaign against Perfidious Albion.

Sorry for the above photo!(ha ha)

A great day playing Firemen!
Written by Ronald Sterling.

Thursday morning into the city by train and most travelled for free as part of Seniors Week. A quick roundup at Parliament Station where Will purchased a bottle of water and spilt a little. (Seriously). Wal led the way to the former Eastern Hill Fire Station which is now the Fire Services Museum. Our guide Ian, a former fire officer really knew his stuff and gave a great presentation in this beautiful old building. From horse drawn steam powered pumpers through to the 1920's control room with large, polished timber cabinets-very impressive.

Following the hour-long tour, we were able to look into the modern fire station next door and Wal had arranged with his son Brad (a present-day Firey) to explain the more modern procedures in fire suppression.

Then seriously motivated for refreshment we took to the Imperial Hotel directly opposite Parliament House. Up on the roof top bistro and bar we were safe from demonstrators or pollies and so concluded a very pleasant day.

Special effort award goes to Des Fullard who with the help of his wife and daughter was able to attend using a motorised wheelchair whilst his wife used a wheelie walker.

Great effort!

Thanks, Wal for the organisation.

He hasn't dirtied his pants, has he?

Just as a matter of interest I spotted Derek holding up a signpost outside Hallam station on Thursday arvo. I spotted him too late to pull over and offer a free Uber lift!

No reports or photos of the happenings at the shed.

No report on happenings last Tuesday. Seems like Xmas break has arrived early!
